Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-6 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Imamura et al (5,282,689) in combination with Asao et al (5,804,536) or Fletcher (5,650,380).

Imamura et al ["Imamura"] disclose a roller bearing composed of an outer race, an inner race and rolling elements interposed between the outer race and the inner race, and wherein a lubricant composition is filled in the bearing. See column 1, line 60 to column 2, line 10. The lubricant composition comprises a polyphenyl ether base oil which has a kinematic viscosity of 90-160 cSt at 40°C. See column 2, lines 11-33. Applicants teach in the specification on pages 5 and 6 that ether-based oils including phenyl ether oils are suitable as the synthetic base oil in the invention. The lubricant composition of Imamura may contain a diurea thickener in an amount of 2 to 35 weight percent and may also contain known additives such as oxidation inhibitors, rust preventives, extreme pressure additives, etc. See column 5, line 20 to column 6, line 8. Applicants' invention differs by adding a metal naphthenate and/or a succinic acid derivative as a rust-preventative additive to the grease composition. However, the prior art references to Asao et al ["Asao"] and Fletcher show that these additives are conventional in grease compositions.

Art Unit: 1764

Asao disclose a solid lubricant for bearings which comprises a lubricating grease and polyethylene powder. Asao teaches that a rust preventive in the form of a sulfonate or a fatty polyhydric alcohol partial ester is added to the composition. See column 1, line 55 to column 2, line 24. Asao teaches that instead of or in combination with the fatty polyhydric alcohol partial ester, a half ester succinate may be used as the rust preventive agent. See column 3, lines 14-18, and claim 6. Fletcher discloses a lubricating grease composition suitable for use in constant velocity joints. The grease comprises a base oil, a urea compound thickener, conventional additives and zinc naphthenate in an amount of 0.05 to 12 percent by weight. See column 2, lines 46-55, and column 3, lines 20-31. The examiner is of the position that having the prior art references before the inventors at the time the invention was made, it would have been obvious to have added a known rust preventive additive, such as the half ester succinate of Asao, and the zinc naphthenate component of Fletcher to the composition of Imamura if their known imparted properties were so desired. The examiner recognizes that obviousness can only be established by combining or modifying the teachings of the prior art to produce the claimed invention where there is some teaching, suggestion, or motivation to do so found either in the references themselves or in the knowledge generally available to one of ordinary skill in the art. See In re Fine, 837 F.2d 1071, 5 USPQ2d 1596 (Fed. Cir. 1988) and In re Jones, 958 F.2d 347, 21 USPQ2d 1941 (Fed. Cir. 1992). In this case, the motivation relied on by the examiner is the express teaching in Imamura allowing for the addition of conventional grease additives as needed to the composition.
